Negotiation Budget Information System is the tool that uses the build budget (created by BBIS), translates the time representation of the position resources into money and facilitates the "negotiation" process of the budget. The "negotiation" of the budget is the process of documenting and quantitatively expressing changes to the working budget, post allocation. The application allows for the creation and management of this documentation in an object called a managed unit. Each managed unit is the quantity of a change, expressly adjusting the budget cost via the increase or decrease or reduction and redistribution of a set number of budget components. The managed units are either resource level granulation or defined globally by a coding matrix metric. The net result of the committed managed units are then analyzed and reported through a dedicated reporting feature.
